Table 5: Employability within the Politics/IR curriculum

Theme 1: Explicit Modules and Credit Bearing Schemes	These include credit bearing placement schemes, credit bearing year abroad schemes and modules which focus on work, labour and employability	4 of the 6 'Elite' university Politics and IR departments engage with these schemes. 6 out of 9 'New' university Politics and IR departments engage with these schemes
Theme 2: Implicit skills and Assessment regimes	This includes the skills acquired throughout the undertaking of a degree (presentation, communication, time-keeping etc) and skills developed through traditional and creative forms of assessment (report writing, independent research, policy briefings, poster presentations etc).	6 of the 6 'Elite' university departments noted engagement with this theme. 9 of the 9 'New' university departments noted engagement with this theme. However, often their responses were more tied to 'creative' assessment such as report writing, debating, group presentations and poster presentations than the implicit professional skills implicit in their degree programmes.

Theme 3: Lack of curriculum ingrained employability learning	This theme relates to universities offering no explicit training on employability beyond standard transferable skills gained through a typical degree programme.	1 of the 6 'Elite' university departments noted there is no specific employability element to the curriculum. 1 of the 9 'New' university departments noted there is no specific employability element to the curriculum.
